

Then explain the difference between using override and new (using binding behavior)

Answer :

1. Override: Enables runtime binding in (polymorphism) where the derived method will be called even when using a base class reference.
2. new: Hides the base method with compile-time binding; the base method is called when using a base class reference.